

Collaboration

- The interests of patient organizations and pharmaceutical companies often coincide; both want new and effective therapies to be approved and funded for use. Patient organizations and pharmaceutical companies can work together effectively and ethically towards this goal. True or false. Support your answer.

- In the long run smart health solutions save money and lives. Patient organizations have a responsibility to present these smart solutions to health authorities. True or false. Support your answer.

- When advocating for change in the health system, making an emotional appeal is more important than presenting convincing data. True or false. Support your answer.

- Those who make waves with health care providers risk receiving inferior health care. True or false. Support your answer.

- When patient organizations and physician groups work at cross-purposes or in an uncoordinated manner, governments invest resources elsewhere. True or false. Support your answer.